

Most Crucial Policy

Seeing the children growing up cheerfully and in good health free from any worries, the Korean people recollect with deep emotion the Third Plenary Meeting of the Eighth Central Committee of the WPK which discussed the issue of improving the Party's childcare policy.

At the meeting held two years ago, the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un, stressing that bringing up the children so that they would envy nothing in the world was the core of the policies of the WPK and its honourable duty, said that no revolutionary work was more important for the Party than to bring up the children, the future of the country, to be healthy, and that creating improved childcare conditions even by investing a huge sum of money was the most crucial policy and supreme desire of the Party and the state.

He added: It has to be the way of advance and development of the revolution to exert more sincerity to children even though the conditions become worse and to take dynamic steps forward towards the future of communism with the might of that love.

If children born in this country, our rising generations, are fed well and grow up healthily in a nice environment, our society will, 20 or 30 years later, be that much more lively and vigourous and our national potentiality will be that much greater.

It was proceeding from this view that he defined upbringing of children as the most crucial policy when fierce struggle for implementing the decisions of the Eighth Congress of the Party was under way across the country and there were many sectors and units which needed focused efforts and funding.

Deeply moved by the Party's childcare policy, the Korean people are conducting a vigorous struggle to hasten a better tomorrow.