

Weak Point Found at Once

One day in November Juche 103 (2014), the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un visited a foodstuff factory.

Looking round several places of the factory, he paid close attention to providing the workers with better conditions and environment for production.

It was when he dropped in at the general control room.

Kim Jong Un, pointing to the lower part of the control table, asked an official what was there under the table.

When an official answered to his question, he put a chair close to the table.

Nobody round him could guess why.

Kim Jong Un sat on the chair and measured something.

Then he said that when they sat at such a table for a long time, the controllers would feel their legs painful.

He saw at once that the controllers would feel inconvenience working at the table enclosed in the lower part.

He advised the officials to make the upper part of the table a little protrude farther to the chair or change the table for another.

The factory officials were surprised as the leader had realized at once the inconvenience of the controllers and taken a relevant measure though not only they but also many other people who had visited the factory so far had never thought that the controllers would feel inconvenience.

This is another impressive anecdote produced by ardent affection of Kim Jong Un, who gives top and absolute priority to the interests and convenience of the people and devotes his all to this end.