

Visiting a Disaster Area

On the early morning of one October day in Juche 109 (2020) the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un came to the reconstruction site in faraway Kimhwa County which had been afflicted by a natural disaster.

The local officials were deeply moved to think that he must have had a long, difficult journey.

Having a bird's eye view of the newly-built houses with satisfaction, he asked a senior official of the county if the local people liked the houses.

The official answered that they liked the houses which were built under his warm care, saying that the houses would stand unperturbed even if the sky might fall down. Comrade Kim Jong Un said that he had tried to come there earlier but he had not been able to find time.

When the official said he was sorry to have him in such a rough site, Kim Jong Un said he was alright and that he was willing to go anywhere in the world if he could bring happiness and pleasure to the people.

Hearing him, the officials could hardly repress their emotion.

Even though he was busier than ever before and had many units to inspect in the run-up to the 75th founding anniversary of the Workers' Party of Korea, he visited Kimhwa County which is far away and so has few visitors.

Looking up at him, the officials realized once again that as he regarded it as his noble mission to defend the people's happiness, he never minded going anywhere, however distant it might be, if it was for the good of the people.
