

Fairest Judge

Whenever he is told about things done for the sake of people or structures to be presented to them, the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un says: The fairest judge is the people.

A few years ago, he got aboard a tramcar on a trial run despite his busy schedules.

After estimating its buzzing sound for a while, he said the tramcar was manufactured well and that it proved its worth.

An official said the tramcar could be wonderful as they manufactured it according to the design he had sent to them.

Kim Jong Un said: The prototype tramcar was manufactured by our working class. They made painstaking efforts to make it well. To judge the new tramcar is not me but the people.

If the people say good, it is good and, if they say bad, it is bad; no work done is meaningful however wonderful if it fails to meet their sentiments and demands—this was the motto he taught the officials to cherish throughout their life.

That day, he stressed that our Party would pluck even a star from the sky if it is the wish of the people.

The officials were firmly resolved to become true servants of the people by regarding their opinions as the fairest judge.
